

Professors study foreign aid and economic growth

WASHINGTON, D.C. (UPI) —

Political science professor [redacted] will study the effectiveness of U.S. foreign aid in building economic growth in the world. Professor [redacted] will be working with political scientists from Argentina and Mexico. The University of Virginia and the University of Pittsburgh will be part of the U.S. effort in helping to study the aid in the past decade.

ALIQUOT

Washington, D.C.

Professor Michael S. Shuman features in a feature on "The Economic Research"

Scholarship

from all other factors.

With the country experiencing economic growth, the grant of $298,000 was given jointly by city organizations to make citizens more aware of their rights. The focus of these organizations range from "human rights to bias. Because the United States is the country that used the

Scholar

THE STORY

